

Name _____

Making Inferences

Infer from the Text

Read the Story

A faint glow seeped through the curtains, casting soft shadows across the room as Sarah nestled deeper into her armchair. She traced the intricate patterns of the book cover with her fingertips, each groove telling a story of its own.

The room was silent except for the rhythmic ticking of the antique clock on the mantel, marking the passage of time with unwavering precision.

Lost in the world of words, Sarah's mind drifted to distant lands and forgotten realms. She reveled in the scent of old paper and ink, savoring the magic that each page held within its embrace.

But as she turned the page, a sudden thud jolted her from her reverie. Startled, she glanced around, her heart racing, searching for the source of the disturbance.

A soft rustling emanated from the corner of the room, where a pile of forgotten belongings lay shrouded in darkness. Sarah's breath caught in her throat as she strained to see through the dim light. Was it just a trick of the imagination, or was there something—or someone—lurking in the shadows?

Answer the Questions

1. What is Sarah doing in the passage?

- A. Reading
- B. Sleeping
- C. Cooking
- D. Exercising

2. What interrupts Sarah?

- A. A knock on the door
- B. A loud crash
- C. A phone call
- D. A sudden noise

3. What does the ticking of the antique clock symbolize?

- A. Time passing slowly
- B. Time passing quickly
- C. Time standing still
- D. Time being wasted

4. Where does the rustling sound come from?

- A. The bookshelf
- B. Under the chair
- C. The window
- D. The corner of the room