Hyperbole Hunt

Directions: Ready to be a hyperbole detective? Today, you're going to find hyperboles hiding all over the place! Keep your eyes wide open—we're on the lookout for those wild exaggerations that make our writing come alive! Read Hazel's story below and underline all the hyperboles you find.

Hyperbole Hazel was on a mission to find the legendary “Gold of Exaggeration,” which was said to be hidden deep within the Enchanted Forest. As she began her journey, she noticed something odd: the trees in the forest were so tall, they seemed to touch the sky!

Walking along the path, Hazel suddenly heard a loud rumble. It was so powerful, it shook the ground beneath her feet! “That must have been thunder,” she thought, “but it felt like the sky was falling down on me!”

Hazel continued walking and came across a river. The water was flowing so fast, it looked like it was rushing to escape the earth itself! Hazel decided to cross by jumping on the large stones in the river. Some of the rocks were as big as houses, but Hazel leapt across them with ease.

As she walked further into the forest, Hazel came across a field filled with flowers. They smelled so sweet that they could make you sneeze forever! Hazel laughed, but her eyes began to water from the scent.

Finally, after what felt like hours, Hazel reached the deepest part of the forest. There, shining in the sunlight, was the “Gold of Exaggeration.” Hazel smiled and said, “I’ve traveled through this forest a million miles, and it was all worth it!”
