Sound Story Starter

Directions: Hey there, sound adventurers! Today, we're going to explore the world of onomatopoeia—words that imitate real sounds! Onomatopoeia can make your writing come alive by bringing the sounds of the world around us right into your story.

Read the story starter below, then continue writing the story. Be sure to include at least three onomatopoeic words (like crash, buzz, splash, etc.) in your writing to bring the sounds to life!

It was a peaceful morning in the forest, and the birds were chirping softly in the trees. Suddenly, there was a loud crash! Something had fallen from the sky! Hazel and her trusty toucan, Tuck, rushed toward the sound, their footsteps thumping as they ran through the leaves. When they reached the clearing, they saw a shiny object that buzzed and hummed—it looked like a mysterious spaceship! The air was filled with the sound of something whooshing past them as the ship landed with a soft thud. They knew their adventure had just begun...
